Santa Maria della Scala stands out in modern times as an extraordinary example of adaptive re-use/historic preservation and sustainability, a rehabilitation completed under the direction of architect Guido Canali, now operating as a multi-story museum that is arranged on various strata of this complex structure, built up over centuries, in some parts excavated directly into the geology of Siena. It presents one of the most significant examples in Europe of a modern series of museum and interpretive interventions, woven into a structural assembly of sacred and secular art and architectural spaces, created across several centuries.

Stay in Siena at the Hotel Athena, located in the historic center.

And in closing - here are a few questions that participants may consider on this program in Italy:

How is the study of historical architecture in Italy relevant to the contemporary architecture in the US and elsewhere?

What are the principles of scale, proportion, and articulation that one can see in these places that are relevant to contemporary architectural and urban design?

How do Italians incorporate important sustainability and seismic improvements to their extraordinary historic buildings?

Beauty in art and architecture are everywhere we travel on this program in Italy – how can we learn from these places and people in infusing a heightened level of beauty in modern design?
